Marcie Chan is a social worker. She recently interviewed six students about the family problems they face in their daily lives. Marcie's results were shocking!

One student, Jeff, said he has to go a nearby McDonalds to study in the evening because his flat is tiny and full of people. He must share a bedroom with his brother AND sister and has no place to put his books and toys. Another student, Timothy, cannot get along with his brother. They are always arguing and disagreeing about silly things. Natalie's parents no longer live together. She has to live with her mother during the week and with her father on the weekends. Frank's father recently lost his job and the family doesn't have enough money to pay their rent. As a result, Frank's parents are always worried about money. Julie used to be close with her parents, but nowadays they seldom talk because she is usually texting her friends or surfing the internet. Most seriously, Jade's father has a bad temper. He recently hit Jade's mother during an argument and hurt her!

Marcie wants to help each of these students. What advice should she give?
